The Girl with the Iron Touch (The Steampunk Chronicles Book 3) By Kady Cross

In 1897 London, something not quite human is about to awaken

When mechanical genius Emily is kidnapped by rogue automatons, Finley Jayne and her fellow misfits fear the worst. What's left of their archenemy, The Machinist, hungers to be resurrected, and Emily must transplant his consciousness into one of his automatons—or forfeit her friends' lives.

With Griffin being mysteriously tormented by the Aether, Finley turns to Jack Dandy, but trusting the master criminal is as dangerous as controlling her dark side. Meanwhile, Sam is searching everywhere for Emily. He would walk into hell for her, but the choice she must make will test them more than they could imagine.

To save those she cares about, Emily must confront The Machinist's ultimate creation—an automaton more human than machine. And if she's to have any chance at triumphing, she must summon a strength even she doesn't know she has....

Editorial Review

From Booklist

The Steampunk Chronicles return to Victorian London after a journey to New York City, with our team of paranormal adventurers grown older, wiser, sadder (in the case of American cowboy Jasper), and more firmly coupled. Finley and Griffin, Duke of Greythorne, are breathlessly close to consummating their relationship, while mechanical genius Emily and ruggedly handsome Sam are clearly an item as well. The plot and subplots include an automaton of Queen Victoria, the evil genius known as the Machinist, and a not-human-but-not-wholly-machine automaton in Emily's likeness. Classic steampunk elements abound as do classic romance clichés, including fantastical airships and submarines; dandified crime lords; plentiful clothing descriptions; and hard biceps and "trembling excitement." Hardcore steampunk fans may object to the formulaic romance writing, and as the third in the series, this title won't quite stand alone. However, romance-loving steampunkers new to the series may go back to the first two titles to catch up on the action-packed adventures. Grades 10-12. --Debbie Carton
