They All Had Eyes: Confessions of a Vivisectionist By Michael Slusher

Most people have a blind spot in their understanding of how biomedical and pharmaceutical research is performed. They may be vaguely aware that some mice and rats were involved - the animals themselves no doubt benefiting from wondrous injections of life-saving compounds, with minimal suffering. The truth is far more horrifying and brutal than people can imagine. In this book, the author has laid open a raw wound in his heart to help people see behind the curtain and observe what actually takes place in what can only be described as true dungeons of despair. In it, he chronicles the animals that he worked on - from mice to dogs to monkeys - and the terrible procedures that he performed on them as a matter of business. The author shares his reflections about his work and the traumatic memories he experiences as a result, pulling no punches nor whitewashing the details of his previous profession. This book highlights the intense suffering and waste of thousands of lives in such a way as to leave the reader without any doubt about whether animal research is justified or required.

Editorial Review

Review

"Michael Slusher is a brave man. It takes extraordinary character to come to terms with the horror of his previous life, in which he intentionally inflicted the most horrific pain and suffering on others daily, as part of his respected work as a vivisectionist. It takes exceptional courage to acknowledge and confront his actions, and then share them with the world where he would in all probability be vilified by colleagues, both strangers and friends, as well as the animal lovers of the world who abhor the exploitation of all animals and live accordingly.

Michael Slusher is also an incredible writer, bringing home the seemingly ordinariness of the work, which is in fact the stuff of nightmares and horror films. At the same time there is a real sense of humanity and his own pain and regret is palpable. This book is essential reading for everyone who has questions about how we live our lives and how we can progress. This is a well written, riveting page turner with hope and light in these pages too."

- Toni Brockhoven, National Chairperson Beauty Without Cruelty South Africa

From the Back Cover

"SAEN can mine and interpret facts, figures, and violations, but this does not give a complete picture of what truly happens to animals in labs or how it affects those involved. Look through Slusher's eyes into the realities of animal experimentation."

- Michael & Karen Budkie, Co-founders, Stop Animal Exploitation NOW! (SAEN)

"Storytelling can inspire action and Slusher's story is a powerful new account of the senseless waste and abuse that we're all forced to pay for - whether we like it or not. Having witnessed and participated in such animal experiments, I encourage everyone to read Slusher's story and to join the fight."

- Anthony Bellotti, Founder/National Campaign Manager, White Coat Waste Movement

"Riveting reading. A true insider's view into a closed and chilling world. Slusher reminded me of Roger Ulrich, who, after years of receiving honors for his experiments on animals, one day faced the fact that he was being cruel and dishonest, and walked away."

- Ingrid Newkirk, President, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA)
